Quilltinerapy

Cupboard to Creativity 2020  January Update.

I have started my year with a real focus on producing quilts to gift to fire affected families, and I will be using this challenge to get myself motivated each month, and I encourage you to do the same.
So for January I took a block I was given a year or so ago. When my friend Bob passed away I was given many of his pieces of work to add into the gifting box. Bob was a talented quilter who had only started in his more senior years. He loved a challenge and this centre was testament to that.

I added my on point border, then extend the quilt into a rectangle before adding a chequered border using hour glass blocks & plain blocks.

I may add some embroidery to the large green areas yet!
Fortunately I had a reasonable collection of green fabrics & even managed to find a length for the dark green border. This is now waiting to be quilted ( along with quite number of others!)
It was lovely to see at least one border from January challenge-great job- I love the different sizes of squares for interest.

Although not technically a part of this Challenge, for me the projects are connected, so I have chosen to share here.

On our long weekend Monday holiday for Australia Day I had a couple of others join me for a sewing bee and happily I can say we made three quilt tops - a braided quilt and 2 slit rainbow quilts, all from donated fabrics ( with some partly completed sections of a quilt-the purple braided parts) Thank you to the people who have donated fabric, and money for waddingevery bit helps and it is greatly appreciated.

I look forward to sharing what happens throughout February, so send me pictures of what you are getting made.
