

Cupboard to Creativity 2020

April Update.

Hi Everyone,

Another month has passed in our lockdown situation.

Many of you may be feeling stressed or anxious by not being able to be meeting with family and friends as we would normally, I know I miss those hugs & interactions.

The benefits I see are many however — time to get work done in the garden, to clean out some cupboards and drawers and more importantly have the focussed time to quilt.

I hope you and your loved ones are safe and well. I know some have had the experience of quarantine after travels — great to know you are home safely — there are so many stories that will emerge from this time.

For the past month I have been holding zoom calls for all the groups and it has been lovely to stay in touch with those want to join in. I have also been very busy with lots of projects and planning, and I hope you are getting a lot achieved as well.

Quilts for Comfort:

Several quilts started in the sewing bee days are now tops ready to quilt or finished. I have had offers of help to quilt some of these tops and they are out in homes being done, plus I have managed to quilt a couple as well. I will collect these when conditions allow more free travel; hopefully soon. I had a message from one lady who has kindly made 11 quilts for this project. I plan to collect them next week.

April Update.

April monthly challenge – "Add a border that expresses movement""

This month there were a number of options that I could have done. What I chose, was to add a border to a hand pieced block I made many years ago.

I decided to do a strip pieced border that added the movement by way of a the dark pink square bouncing around the border. This is a scrap project as I have limited fabrics left in these colours, but I am more than happy with the outcome.

I have not received any pictures related to this month's theme, but I know there are many other projects that have come out of the boxes and been completed and this is great to hear.

With the hope of some of our restrictions being eased this weekend I hope you all have a wonderful long weekend with your family.

I am hoping that by next month we may be back to meeting in person for our groups, so I look forward to that.

In the meantime take care & keep quilting

Jan P.
