Right Angle triangles

Hi Everyone,

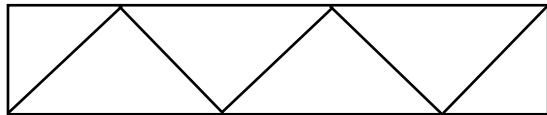

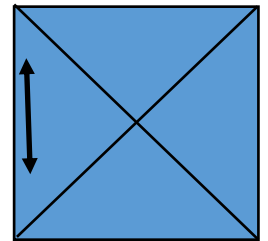

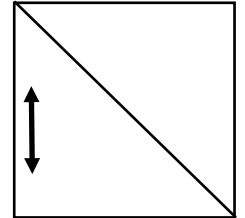

After having fun with the simple shape of a rectangle for March, for the April Challenge I thought we could play with designing something using the very basic unit of a right angle triangle.

This could be as a Half Square Triangle (grain on short side) the other option of Quarter Square triangle—the difference being the grain direction on the unit (grain on long side).

OR

The Quarter square style could also be sewn into strips.

For this challenge you may prefer to find a block design that uses a number of these triangles, and make a series of hoe blocks.

I have a bag of triangles that have been trimmed off previous projects, so my plan is to convert those into a finished project of some kind this month.

There are many block designs using both styles of triangles as shown in the examples here and in the blocks below that can be found online or in many publications..

Have fun designing and playing this month.
