

Cupboard to Creativity July Update 2025

Hi Everyone,

It has been a very busy month—lots happening here, much colder days and nights filled with quilting things and family get togethers plus a few extra social occasions added to the mix.

I have not completed a full project this month, but I managed to get nearly all my arcs sewn and a number of blocks together for my variation of the Wedding ring quilt theme. I am really pleased with the lovely bright colours.

The other colour corners not yet shown will be purple, so all 4 colours come together as a 4 patch. I am using a variety of cream prints as the background throughout.

My new quilt studio is getting closer, the walls are being lined has started & should be finished soon. The painter is being organised, and the electrician is ready to go, so it is all feeling very real now.

I am looking forward to having the larger space—the room I am currently working in doesn't give the layout space I am so used to having:)

I am off to Bundaberg this next week for their quilt show & some classes, and I am looking forward to that.

I hope you have had a great month.

Catch up again soon.

Jan P
